

Everyone loves to see 75:1 odds when their horse wins. Who wouldn't? But those horses don't win all that much, do they? They are considered an extreme long shot.

They do win ... but it's less than 1% of the time.

I'm sure no true Christian Apologist likes the analogy I'm making here. But it's the way things really are, aren't they? Your horse in the race is your Savior. What each of them has done in human history is what we have for our odds.

But it's not just what they've done that has made a name for themselves. Rather, it is what they've done in THE REAL WORLD that demonstrates sacrificial love to all.

Why is sacrificial love the standard?

How else would you know which one to trust?

“Dear children, let’s not merely say that we love each other; let us show the truth by our actions.”

1 John 3:18 NLT

We measure the trustworthiness of people by how consistently their life backs up their words, don't we? That standard is common to us all no matter our religion.

How many of the 75 deities have given us more than just words? EXACTLY ZERO.

What did Jesus Christ give?

A life like no other.

The cross.

The empty grave.

I'd say the odds of betting on Jesus are ...
3 in 1.

See what I did there? Haha.
